DON C. HALL MEDICINE CO., TO CONVERT INTENDED KING'S CASTLE INTO SANITARIUM

The return of Mr. and Mrs. Don C. Hall and their eldest son Don C. Hall, Jr., to Mokena where they will spend Thanksgiving, is of much more than passing interest.

The interest they have taken in our Public School system is well known, the three children of Mr. and Mrs. Don C. Hall, Jr., having been in regular attendance, Carlos graduating from the 8th grade last year and entering the first year of high school this year and the two girls Wanda and Alva taking the first from the opening of the present session.

It is not generally known however, that the Don C. Hall Company of which Don C. Hall is president, have selected Mokena as the Illinois headquarters for the activities of the Seminole Indian Medicine organization, which is conducting a campaign for the sale of "Conyagada, New Life Balm" remedies throughout the United States and adjoining countries.

Mokena has been selected, because of the natural advantages presented in mail, rail and express facilities and for its central location in a prosperous section of the state.

The Don C. Hall Co., is incorporated under the laws of the state of Wisconsin and the stock in the original Company is owned and controlled by the Hall Family.

The activities of this company zation is meeting with unprecedented success and from a beginning of a year and a half they have attracted such wide attention that they have found it necessary to establish a number of central points for the shipping of their wares, one of the principle of which is Mokena.

Projects for the construction of two sanitariums are now under way, one to be established at Stevens Point, Wisconsin, the other at Melbourne, Florida. The attention of John D. Rockefeller, Sr., who so miraculously recovered his strength and vitality, is said to be particularly centered in the southern activities.

The Halls, backed by some of their wealthy and influential friends at Milwaukee and vicinity in Wisconsin are shortly to depart for the southern Gulf Coast country where negotiations are now in progress for the purchase of a $200,000 building owned by no less a personage than the widow of a former enemy of one of the great ruling powers of Europe, the house or castle being of elaborate design and workmanship, having been built and furnished as a possible "house of refuge" for the king and his family in case the late foreign unpleasantness had resulted disastrously to the allies.

It is the intention of the Don C. Hall Company to make this castle the southern headquarters for the Seminole Indian remedies "dow-

May Blow Up Frankfort Brewery

The old wine cellar near Frankfort which has been a landmark of Frankfort township for more than sixty years, is now facing entire oblivion. Some time ago this old cellar was converted into an illicit brewery and was raided by the Federal Prohibition forces who found a plant and beer valued at more than $100,000 in this hillside brewery. When the raid was made no one was to be found about the place and no arrests have been made since. The place has been under guard for months.

The past week Samuel Howard, chief deputy of the United States' marshall's office has announced that he is going before Federal Judge Wilkerson this week and ask for authority to blow up the hillside brewery, declaring that considerable time and effort would be saved by using dynamite instead of axes.

When the brewery was raided several months ago by federal prohibition agents several hundred gallons of four per cent beer were found in the vats and several hundred gallons of beer was in the process of manufacture when the government men arrived. But one was found employed in the plant.

A temporary injunction was issued against the brewery several weeks ago and no one appeared to claim the property or to defend the case. Chief Deputy Howard now wants to blow the brewery to

COOLIDGE STATES WORLD POLICY

Address Before Golden Rule Dinner of Near East Relief Is Nation's Platform.

AMERICA WILL DO HER SHARE

Ambassadors of Many Foreign Lands Give Endorsement to Golden Rule Idea.

The address of President Coolidge at the Golden Rule dinner of the Near East Relief in Washington a few days ago is one of the most important declarations on foreign policy and international relations which he has made since he assumed the presidency. In it he embodies, after profound thought and consideration, his conception of the position which the United States should assume in world affairs. He becomes the sponsor of the Golden Rule idea among nations, and his picture of the part America the World War has been made occasion for many surveys. I need not recall the long period of unprecedented horrors that was the war.

"But even now we are able to perceive the evidence that not all of the ultimate consequences are going to be bad. We are able to realize that a great boon has been conferred on humanity in the weeding out of irresponsible autocratic government. Peoples will be slow to adjust themselves fully to the new conditions. But we are able already to see clearly that the world is moving toward assured peace under a regime of free institutions.

"It is moving in the right direction, and it is doing so because to a greater extent than ever before it has given itself over to the ethical guidance of that broad principle that has been written into our Golden Rule. In many of our relationships it is as yet little more than an ideal; but it is constantly approaching nearer and nearer to universal acceptance as an ideal and a guide. It is the best basis on which the individual may build for good citizenship, the state for permanence and safe progress, the world for universal peace and widely diffused well being.

Seek to Help All
"America is profoundly concerned in behalf of whatever promises to make the world a better neighborhood, and its peoples better neighbors."

NEAR EAST RELIEF GOLDEN RULE DINNER: Ambassador Jusserand, of France; President Coolidge; John H. Finley, Toastmaster; Justice Brandeis; and Chief Justice Hughes.

We have no better wish than that the world should take in European reconstruction to be good and helpful neighbors with all. Though we may have seemed aloof from the scenes of conflict, our people insisted on bearing their share in the world struggle. Later when for a time chaos threatened our people were ready with assistance for the unfortunate and suffering. I have seen tabulations which showed item by item, a total of more than seventeen billion dollars of

The occasion of the dinner was made internationally notable by the presence of the diplomatic representatives of many foreign countries. President Coolidge introduced his address by a reference to the significance of their presence as an endorsement of the Golden Rule campaign.

Five Million Dollars Needed for Refugee Orphans Under American Care.

23 NATIONS JOIN OBSERVANCE

State and County Committees Organized to Insure Success of Nation-Wide Campaign.

By CHARLES V. VICKREY
General Secretary of the Near East Relief.

With the co-operation of civic and religious leaders throughout the United States, the Near East Relief has inaugurated its campaign for the second observance of International Golden Rule Sunday on December 7. The aim is to raise funds to provide during the coming year for 100,000 orphan children under American care in Bible Lands. More than five million dollars is the minimum needed.

The national Golden Rule committee was organized several months ago, under the chairmanship of Cleveland H. Dodge, the well known philanthropist. An executive council is under the chairmanship of John H. Finley, formerly Commissioner of Education of New York State and now prominent as a New York editor. State and county committees are being organized throughout the United States to insure success of the nation-wide campaign.

much to respect, so much to admire, so much to wonder at that we could not bring ourselves to hate him—not even to dislike him.

I haven't a doubt but that old Martin down the street, whom I have always looked upon as the most despicable of men, has virtues that would shine, qualities that are really lovable if I could only know him fully.

SITTING STILL

IT IS Steveason who, in discussing the subject of marriage, advises women not to marry a man unless he smokes. The theory is that such a man will more contentedly stay at home, will sit quietly before the fire for a time after meals and so will more readily submit to that feminine domination and control which is so essential to domestic peace and happiness. Neither in the home nor in business affairs can you do much with a man who is nervously rushing from one place to another; it is only when he is quiet that he can be successfully hypnotized either by his wife or a book agent. Men think best, rest more completely, gain more poise while sitting still.

Cornish was as nervous as a kitten. He could scarcely sit still long enough to eat his meals properly, and when he had swallowed a few mouthfuls he would rush out of the house and hurry to his work again. He was rapidly developing indigestion and an impossible temper; but he would not consult a physician, so Mrs. Cornish confided her trouble to her pastor. He was a wise shepherd, this one.

"Buy him a pipe and a package of tobacco," he advised, to her horror and astonishment, "and encourage him to smoke. You mustn't overdo it, however," he continued, "for if you do you may not be able to drive him away from the chimney corner; he may become lazy, and that is worse than being nervous."

Cornish was a docile and tractable husband in this regard, and he was soon sitting as contentedly in his easy chair after each meal as a lapdog. He read the newspaper, got chummy with his wife, he began to lay on flesh, and before long his business began to pick up because he went at it quietly, with calm self-possession and deliberation.

I am not advising smoking; it is, in general, a dirty, vicious habit which ministers seldom advise taking up; but whatever induces a nervous, busy man to sit still and relax for a few minutes after meals, whatever lures him into quietly meditating for a time, to that extent prepares him for the more strenuous duties of the day. Any way, that's what it did for Cornish.

Ship That Turned Back

Speedwell was the name of the ship that started from Southampton with the Mayflower for New England in 1615. It was bought and fitted out in Holland. It was compelled to turn back on account of accidents.

more than answered the lawyer's question. In the parable of the Good Samaritan He makes clear who is a neighbor, and also what it means to be a neighbor, or what loving a neighbor means. Christ's answer had a double meaning. He not only made clear who is my neighbor, but made it clear that the lawyer was not playing the neighbor. He thus was convicted of not having been a neighbor.

(1) Who is my neighbor? This destitute and wounded man left on the highway by the robbers is the man who needs a neighbor. My neighbor, therefore, is the one who needs my help, whether he lives next door or on the other side of the world. Those who have the Spirit of Christ can see their neighbors on every hand.

(2) What being a neighbor means. Our supreme concern should not be "Who is my neighbor?" but "Whose neighbor am I?" To be a neighbor is, (a) to be on the lookout for those in need of our help (v. 33). (b) To have compassion on the needy (v. 33). Christ's compassion was aroused as He came into contact with those who were suffering and in need. All those who have His nature will be likewise moved. (c) To give to those in need (v. 34). Many are willing to give money to help the poor and needy, but are unwilling to personally minister to them. Many times the personal touch is more important than the material aid. We should give ourselves as well as our money. (d) To bind up wounds (v. 34). (e) To set the helpless ones on our beasts while we walk (v. 34). This is proof that love is genuine. Christians will deny themselves in order to have something to give to those who have need. This kind of sympathy is greatly needed today. (f) To bring to the inn and take care of the unfortunate (v. 34). Genuine love does not leave its service incomplete. Much Christian service is spasmodic, helps and then leaves a man to take care of himself. (g) To give money (v. 35). It costs a good deal to be a neighbor. Love is the most expensive thing in the world. It cost God His only Son. It cost Christ His life. May we go and do likewise!

Most headaches due to lack of internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons form in the accumulated food waste and are carried to all parts of the body. Headaches follow. Biliousness, insomnia, lack of energy, all result from constipation, which if unchecked will lead to serious results.

Avoid Laxatives—Say Doctors

A noted authority says that laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

What is it? What is it?" In uncontrollable excitement Bess cried out. "What are they attacking us for?"

Collins spun around. "The destroyer isn't attacking us," he rasped. "It's a mutiny. Our men have mutinied. They've been preparing for it. That's why they marooned us today. That's why that scoundrel Price gave us all those canned goods."

CHAPTER XI

Springing a Trap

Captain Bunker strode up and down on the bridge of the El Rio till the boat with the adventurers disappeared into the cleft on the line of cliffs. As it passed out of sight he heaved a sigh of relief.

Captain Bunker was a freighter captain and he did not take kindly to passengers. He would not have taken kindly to them even under the most favorable conditions; and he certainly did not do so under the conditions of this voyage, which were anything but favorable.

Here he was on an errand that he had been specifically warned was one of considerable danger. He believed that he had been followed by at least one vessel, and though he seemed to have temporarily thrown his pursuer off the track, he was by no means certain that he had done so permanently. Moreover, he knew that he had at least one traitor on board his ship—and he could not find him. Under such circumstances passengers were more than an annoyance—they were a plague, and Captain Bunker welcomed their departure. He promised himself that before they got back he would catch the traitor if he were among the crew, or would get information that would point to him unmistakably if he were among the passengers. As to which group he belonged, Captain Bunker was by no means satisfied.

He watched till he saw the boat, minus Collins and the passengers, pop her bow out of the cleft and start back to the ship. Then he turned to the second mate.

"I'm going below, Mr. Franks," he said. "I want to examine my safe more carefully, and then I want to interview every man on board. If I want any particular man at any time I'll let you know. Otherwise, send them in one after another."

"Very good, sir."

Captain Bunker turned to descend from the bridge, but stopped as Akin came toward him, evidently desirous of speaking.

The usual intimacies of a voyage had not altered the secretary's reserve. Rather they had increased it. He had spent practically all his time shut up in his stateroom, ticktacking away on his typewriter. He emerged at meals, which he ate almost in silence, and then vanished again. Seldom or never did he come on deck. He remained, in short, to all appearance the same smooth-running piece of office machinery that he had been in New York—from those on board and have avoided listening to the various surmises that have been passed so freely. However, I have not been able to make myself wholly deaf; and I have gathered that you believe that we have a spy on board who is trying to signal our route to some following vessel. Am I right?"

"You are!"

"I thought so. Well, captain, in that case, I think I can throw some light on the matter. Yesterday afternoon I happened to be looking out of my port, hole when I saw a bottle tossed out of the port just aft. I caught a glimpse of it—just enough to let me see that it had a small flag sticking from its neck. Then it flew to pieces and disappeared. I thought this was very peculiar and waited and watched until I had seen three similar bottles appear and promptly undergo the same fate. I did not hear any report, but when I went on deck I saw Lord George was sitting at the stern shooting at things with a rifle, and I suppose he broke them."

"I know he broke them," remarked Captain Bunker. "What I don't know and want to find out is, who threw them into the water."

"Oh! You knew of the bottles?" Akin's tones expressed surprise. "I am sorry. I thought I might be able to help you." The secretary rose.

But Captain Bunker checked him. "Sit down, Mr. Akin," he commanded. "You have helped me already. There are only two staterooms aft of yours. If the bottles came from aft of you, they must have come from the stateroom of Miss Denslow or from that of Mrs. Archman."

"Or from this cabin, Captain Bunker." The secretary's tones were peculiar.

Bunker looked at him keenly. "This cabin was kept locked all afternoon," he said, "except while I was in it."

"Then the bottles must have come from Miss Denslow's room—for of course they could not have come from Mrs. Archman's."

Captain Bunker hesitated. "It would seem so," he said. "But Miss Archman seems very sure of Miss Denslow."

"Miss Archman is a girl and is apt to be enthusiastic," commented Akin dryly. "She met Miss Denslow only when the captain hesitated, half listening; then, as the noise seemed subsiding, he dropped back in his chair and touched his bell once more.

Almost instantly he heard the crack of a revolver, a cry and a fall.

Bunker sprang across the cabin to his dresser and jerked open the drawer, disclosing a long, blue-barreled revolver. He snatched it up and rushed to the door and through the wardroom to the deck.

But he was too late. As he emerged from the outer door, a dozen men flung themselves upon him. With a yell, he hurled the weapon into the face of the nearest man. Price's face rose before him, and he struck out with his fists and saw the steward go reeling back. Before he could strike again the men were on him and he went down in a whirling mass of legs and arms and straining bodies, from which came the soft, crushing sound of drumming fists. For a moment he struggled desperately; then someone got home upon his head with something far harder than flesh and bone, and his senses fled.

When he came to himself he was back in his cabin, sitting in his own chair. He felt weak and dizzy and half blinded by something that was trickling into his eyes. When he tried to put up his hands to wipe it away he found that his wrists were tightly bound together and that he was lashed to the chair.

A moment later he heard the cabin door open and someone come in. "Wait a minute, captain," said a voice, which he at once knew to be Price's. "Wait a minute and I'll wipe that blood out of your eyes."

A dripping sponge mopped his eyes and forehead, then plopped into a basin, and a towel was pressed to his face.

The next second Price came from behind him and sat down on the other side of the table. He had taken off his steward's apron and had strapped his waist with a belt, in which hung a pistol that Captain Bunker recognized as his own.

"There, captain, that's better," he said smilingly. "I was getting worried about you. You've been dead to the world for an hour. Sorry I had to knock you in the head. Gee! You made a pretty fight of it."

All She Wanted

She was apparently a Frenchwoman who spoke Russian or vice versa, and when she visited the home office she produced her passport over and over again in the course of her conversation with several porters and messengers.

Eventually they found a man who in 1919 had been transferred from the French to the north Russian front. After a long conversation intelligence came to this man. Stopping the woman's conversation with one hand, he beckoned to his colleagues with the other.

"Lady wants a house or a small flat," he said.

tomatoes. The amount of the loot was hurriedly estimated at $2,000,000. During the shooting one of the bandits was wounded.

On the day following the robbery Capt. William Schoemaker of the Chicago detective force learned that there was a wounded man at the home of Walter McComb at 53 North Washenaw avenue under the name of James H. Wayne. He surrounded the house and arrested Wayne, who afterward proved to be Joe Newton, the wounded member of the robber band.

Southern Pacific Rail Men Voting on Strike

Oakland, Cal.—Engineers, firemen and hostlers of the Southern Pacific railroad are taking a strike vote. The number of men affected, 6,500, work on lines from Ogden, Utah, to the Pacific coast and from El Paso, Texas, westward.

The vote followed refusal of the company to negotiate directly a demand for an 8 per cent increase in pay, submitted to the railroad labor board.

Big Wage Reduction for Textile Workers in Maine

Portland, Maine.—A readjustment of wages in the cotton mills of Maine went into effect on Monday with a reduction of 10 per cent. Approximately 13,000 employees were affected. The last previous change in wages was in April, 1923, when a 12½ per cent increase was given. The reduction was generally ascribed to southern competition and to a poor market.

Drying Out in Winter

AS SOON as cool weather begins, we put on heavier clothes, close up our houses and start our stoves and furnaces. The outside air can't get in and the inside air soon has all the moisture dried out of it by the stove or furnace heat.

The result is that by the middle of the winter most of the furniture is loose in the joints and most of the people in the house are suffering from colds. This is due to living in dry, hot air. Human beings weren't made to live in dry air. A great zoologist once said, "Man came from fishes and he still retains some of the sea in his body." A reasonable amount of moisture is necessary for health.

When we live, day after day, in stove, furnace or steam-heated air, the dry air takes up the moisture from our bodies, instead of giving up moisture to us as it should.

This constant drying out shows in two ways. Our skin becomes too dry. Our heavy clothes and hot rooms keep it too warm. "Winter itch" is usually caused by too heavy clothes and too dry air.

The other result is that the dry air parches our throat and lungs. It takes up all the moisture in our nose, throat and bronchial tubes.

Our throats are too dry, our skin is too dry. We are sensitive to the least change of temperature. We chill easily. We "sit in a draft" and then we say we "catch cold." Of course we do. We've been kiln drying our bodies for weeks and everything is ready for a conflagration.

All living and working rooms which are artificially heated should have a reasonable amount of moisture in the air. All properly constructed furnaces have a water pan to moisten the hot air. Fill it every day. You'll be warmer and healthier. Moist air at 60 degrees Fahrenheit is warmer than dry air at 75 degrees Fahrenheit and much healthier.

If your house is heated with stoves, keep an open pan of water on the back of the stove. You'll be surprised to see how fast the water goes.

If you have steam or hot water heat, keep a pan of water in every room. This will not only keep your furniture from falling to pieces but it will keep your lungs and skin from drying out.

PRIMARY FACTORS AFFECTING FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES OF THE FARMER

Forty-two per cent of the farmers in the United States blame their financial difficulties on the low prices of farm products, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, which has completed a study of the primary factors affecting the financial difficulties of the farmer based on a survey made by the United States Department of Agriculture. Seventeen per cent of the farmers feel that high taxes are the direct cause of the farm depression, eleven per cent blame the high costs for farm labor, ten per cent feel that high freight rates are responsible, ten per cent blame the high interest, six per cent credit the depression to reckless expenditures during boom period, and four per cent think it was too much credit.

An inquiry made by the Department of Agriculture through both bankers and farmers shows that on an average 5 per cent of the farm owners in 15 corn and wheat-producing states lost their farms through foreclosure or bankruptcy during the late depression. Four and a half per cent more had turned over their farms to creditors without legal process, making a total of about 9.5 per cent who had lost their farms with or without legal proceedings. An additional 15 per cent were really bankrupt, but were holding on through the leniency of their creditors. By groups of states the percentage of owner-farmers who lost their farms since 1920 were as follows: Five East North Central states, nearly 6 per cent; seven North Central states, over 9 per cent; and for the three Mountain states nearly 20 per cent. The percentage of tenants who lost their property ran materially higher.

Records of the Department of Justice indicate that in the pre-war years, 5 per cent of all the bankruptcy cases were farmers. During the deflation 14 per cent of all bankruptcy cases were farmers. In some of these states where in pre-war years the farmer bankruptcy cases represented about 7 per cent of all such cases, this percentage in 1922 had risen to nearly 30 per cent.

These losses have not been due to inefficiency on the part of the farmers, points out the Agricultural Foundation, as practically all of them were incurred by men who had been doing fairly well until they entered the period of drastic deflation.
